The effects of Mg²⁺ and Ca²⁺ on the rate and extent of diacylglycerol (DAG) release from cardiac sarcoplasmic reticulum (SR) vesicles were examined. Using a rapid and simple procedure that separates DAG from Ca²⁺ and Mg²⁺ and provides a quantitative measure of efflux of DAG, it was determined that addition of 50 microM Mg²⁺ to a Ca²⁺-depleted (0 Ca²⁺) SR suspension caused an immediate efflux of DAG. Efflux was linearly related to the free Mg^{2+} concentration and was inhibited by intracellular Mg^{2+} ions and the specific Mg^{2+} channel antagonist aminopyridine. Similar results were obtained using Ca^{2+} and DAG-releasing drugs that increase DAG efflux. The efflux of DAG was inhibited by the Ca^{2+} /calmodulin antagonist W-7 as well as by arachidonyltrifluoromethyl ketone, inhibitors of phospholipase A2 (PLA2) and high Ca^{2+} /high Mg^{2+} -stimulated and high DAG-induced phospholipase C (PLC). This indicates that Mg^{2+} -induced Ca^{2+} efflux activates PLA2, which converts Ca^{2+} to free arachidonic acid, and that intracellular Mg^{2+} ions are also required for PLA2 activation. The efflux of DAG was stimulated by F-log P 1.1-1.4 or higher when free $[Mg^{2+}] > 20$ microM and when free $[Ca^{2+}] > 20$ microM,

Western Washington University's anthropology department was founded in 1910 and is now the only accredited anthropology program in the state of Washington, with a focus on the Northwest Pacific region. The school is home to about 11 full-time faculty and 50 part-time faculty and staff who teach over 400 undergraduate and graduate students. UW's Anthropology Department offers 12 courses for credit and many more continuing education courses for fee-paying schools, businesses, and individuals. The anthropology minor is designed to provide students with a diverse academic foundation that will enable them to pursue advanced studies in a wide range of fields. Courses include culture and society, ethnology, archaeology, linguistics, anthropology of the arts, history of anthropology, and, for student's interested in archaeology, anthropology of the Pacific Northwest. You can learn more about our anthropology courses and majors here. Anthropology minors can be used in any UW school in which a major and minor in anthropology are offered. Pre-med/biology minors in psychology or medicine at UW are the best option for anyone with an interest in psychology or medicine. Strong science backgrounds are highly valued by these programs. GMS 326 - Internship Students do their fieldwork in their summer between junior and senior year at a research site in the U.S. or abroad. Students must be enrolled in at least three upper-level courses in the department.

Anthropology fieldwork focuses on specific research areas that interest students. Currently there are research opportunities in the Pacific Northwest that include: archaeology,
